Digital Learning for Digital Students: Making it Real

Target Audience: K-12 Teachers, Administrators, Technology Coordinators, Media Specialists, School of Education Faculty

This informative and practical one-day event features a keynote, breakout sessions, and a panel of student-participants. In addition, there will be an opportunity to observe a 21st Century technology-infused classroom activity with middle school students from a Michigan area school. Focused on the needs of K-12 educators teaching today’s digital students with the latest resources. This event promises participants exposure to new ideas and tools during an active and thought-provoking day.

Educators attending will:

- Hear a Keynote by Dr. Brian McNulty
  With his extensive experience in working with schools and districts, Dr. McNulty has great knowledge of the research on school and district effectiveness and can translate this research into practical applications

- View a classroom with middle school students with laptops working on projects using Web 2.0 resources and tools.

- Consider the tools used in classroom activities during each of the breakout sessions.

- Understand ideas, approaches, planning and assessment required for teaching 21st Century skills.

- Gain access to a social networking site with all the resources, tools, approaches and planning available during or after the event.

- Have an opportunity to ask questions during a student and teacher panel discussion.
